Baseball in the United States began modestly in the 19th century as a variation of many games that made use of a ball and some sort of bat. Throughout this time, baseball’s growth mirrored the growth of the United States. By the turn of the century, the country had boomed through the Industrial Revolution with cities growing at an alarming rate. Likewise, baseball had evolved into a professional sport where spectators paid to watch skilled athletes play a child’s game.

The popularity of amateur baseball clubs that played between 1845-1865, led to the introduction of the first professional baseball club, the Cincinnati Red Stockings. The Red Stockings’ success against the amateur teams provided incentive to create America’s first professional baseball league, the National Association of Baseball Players in 1871. Though the new league was not a complete success, it significantly increased baseball’s popularity across the land.
believed that reforms were needed to protect baseball from the corruption and instability that surrounded the National Association. At a meeting in Louisville in 1876, Hubert, Spalding, and representatives of the St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Louisville baseball clubs designed a set of guidelines for a new league, named the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs. The National League contained eight charter clubs, however, between 1876 and 1900, only Chicago and Boston fielded a team each year.

During the first two decades of its existence, the National League withstood threats of competition from newer professional leagues. In the 1890s, the National League’s dominance weakened after growing to 12 teams, an unmanageable number for that period. Although baseball remained the country’s favorite sport, it was gaining a reputation for rowdiness and dirty play that didn’t match the era. This prompted Byron Banford “Ban” Johnson and Charles Albert Comiskey to found a league based on strong leadership and good virtue. In the American League, games were not played on Sunday.

and women were encouraged to attend ball games. Johnson and Comiskey set a goal to establish a new image for the game. Recognizing that its power had declined partially by managing too many teams, the National League sold four clubs to the new league in 1900.

Following this transaction, National League officials still scoffed at the new league when it began play in 1901. However, after hiring many premier National League players with higher salaries and running a “kinder, gentler” league, American League attendance exceeded National League attendance by 600,000 fans in 1902. Early in 1903, the National League granted the American League status as a Major League. With this, came a consistent scheduling system, player contract regulations, and playing guidelines that the two leagues would share. Another product of this agreement was the World Series, which pitted the American League Champion against the National League Champion in a nine game series (later shortened to seven games) that would determine the World Champion of Baseball.

In 1903, 16 franchises competed for the first World Series Championship. Though some of these teams have since moved to new locations or changed their names, the modern era of baseball began in 1903 with the same goal that exists today.

The All-Star Game is divided into two modes: the Home Run Derby and the All-Star Classic. The Home Run Derby lets you challenge Junior to a power hitting contest. In this game, each player tries to hit the most home runs before making 10 outs. The All-Star Classic features a collection of top players from the American and National Leagues in an exhibition game.

The World Series mode is a best-of-seven game series that can be played by 1 or 2 players. The first team to win 4 games, wins the World Series Championship.

When beginning season play, you have several options available. You can play a season that consists of 26 games, 78 games, or the traditional 162 game schedule.

You may also play under the 1969-93 divisional format (4 Divisions) or the proposed 1994 divisional format (6 Divisions). In the new configuration 4 teams (3 division champions and 1 wildcard team) from each league to qualify for the league playoffs and a possible trip to the World Series.

The progress in your Season or World Series is saved automatically after each game. The game can also save and store 1 World Series and one Season for play at a later time.

The team selection screen appears when you select the Exhibition, All-Star Game, new Season, or new World Series modes. Use the +Control Pad and the B Button to select a team. The X Button will cancel your selection if you change your mind and want to pick a new team.

There are two Today’s Game Screens that appear in the game. The first Today’s Game Screen appears following the Team Selection Screen. The other Today’s Game Screen is a pause screen that appears when you press the START Button during a game.

The Exhibition Game allows you to match any two teams in a single contest with nothing but pride riding on the outcome. Use this mode to test your skills against the computer manager or a friend.
Ken Griffey Jr. Presents: Major League Baseball uses an icon system so players can quickly and easily select various game options.

Play Ball:

This icon allows you to enter the main Options Screen.

Options

This icon lets you view your team’s accumulated statistics for the current season or World Series.

Stadium

During exhibition play, you may select this icon and choose to play inside a different stadium.

1994

The schedule icon accesses a month at a glance calendar that lets you check out upcoming matchups and results of previous contests. You can only use this icon during season play.

Line Up

This icon lets you make changes to your lineup or defensive positioning.
The bullpen icon accesses the bullpen screen where you can select a different starting pitcher before a game or a relief pitcher during the game.

This icon lets you edit and save new names for all 700 players.

This icon opens the Play Options screen. On this screen, you can select one of the following four options:

Designated Hitter: The game automatically selects the DH when the home team is an American League team. This function lets you decide to use the DH or not.

Manage Only: This allows you to make managerial decisions like when to steal and bunt. The computer controls all pitchers, batters, and fielders in this mode.

Auto Fielding: This option lets you pitch and hit without fielding. You can use the auto fielder to give a novice player an advantage against an experienced opponent.

Background Music: Select this mode to turn off the background music.

During season play, the newspaper icon displays current league standings.

The exit icon returns you to the previous screen. Pressing the X Button performs the same action on all pregame screens.

Select this icon on the lineup, bullpen, and team edit screens to save your data.

Pinch Hitter/Relief Pitcher
The pitcher/batter screen is the primary game screen and where the cat and mouse game between the pitcher and the batter occurs. While the pitcher tries to keep the batter off balance with a variety of pitches, the batter looks for a good pitch to drive into the gap or over the fence. This confrontation sometimes takes place as many as 150 times in an actual Major League game.

During game play, the pitcher/batter screen appears until the batter hits the ball or the pitcher steps off the mound to pick off a base runner. When either of these actions occur, the fielder screen will appear. Refer to page 15-16 for pitching and batting controller functions.

The camera box in the upper right corner helps you see the base runners. Refer to page 15 for base runner controller functions.

The field screen is where all fielding and base running takes place. When fielding fly balls, the radar screen in the lower right corner will display the location where the ball will land (X) and the location of the nearest fielder (blue dot). The white dot on the radar screen indicates the current location of the ball. On ground balls, the ball and the fielder are the only markers that appear on the radar.

On the field screen, a ball's-eye will appear at the same location as the “X” on the radar. This target acts like a magnet to help you catch fly balls. To catch a fly ball, move your fielder close to the “X” on the radar and release the +Control Pad. If the character is close enough to the target, he'll automatically move to the spot and camp under the ball before catching it.

Since the “X” and ball’s-eye don’t appear on ground balls or short line drives into the outfield, you must line up the outfielder (blue dot) with the ball (white dot) so the player can field the ball cleanly. You don't need to use the radar for ground balls in the infield since the fielder and the ball are usually visible on the screen at the same time. Also, on hot grounders through the infield, the computer will automatically line up your outfielder while you're controlling the infielder. Keep this in mind so you don't accidentally overrun ground balls in the outfield.

This game recognizes the Infield Fly Rule. The ruling occurs when the batter hits a fly ball in the infield with runners on first and second base. This rule prevents the fielder from intentionally dropping the ball and turning a quick double play.
ATLANTA BRAVES (Boston 1876-52, Milwaukee 1953-1965, Atlanta 1966-)
World Championships (since 1903): 1914, 57
National League Championships: 1877, 78, 83, 91, 92, 93, 97, 98, 1914, 57, 58, 91, 92
National League Division Championships (since 1969): 1969, 82, 91, 92, 93

For baseball fans across the country, the 1993 Brave season appeared to be scripted in Hollywood rather than Atlanta. Near the All-Star break, the Braves trailed the Giants by 8 games and were surrounded by talk regarding the team’s failure to live up to high preseason expectations. The outlook didn’t brighten until July 20, the day ’92 home run champ, Fred McGriff was acquired from San Diego. With the Giants still playing outstanding baseball, the Braves methodically stormed to a 2nd half record of 54-19 overtaking the Giants on the last day of the season. Though the Braves’ finish of ’93 was the stuff of legends, it was not the best in team history. In 1914, the Boston Braves compiled an incredible 68-19 record from July 4 to steal the pennant from the New York Giants, the National League powerhouse of that time period. Heading into ’94, the Braves reload with the best starting pitching staff in baseball, headed up by Cy Young Award winners, Greg Maddux and Tom Glavine.

CINCINNATI REDS (1869-)

In addition to being the first professional baseball team, the Cincinnati Reds have been involved in many historical events that are commonplace today. These “firsts” include the first switch-hitter to appear in a National League contest (1870), the first National League home run (1876), the first night game (1935), and the first televised game (1939). Later, the Big Red Machine of the ’70s became the top N.L. team of the decade by winning 6 division championships and appearing in 4 World Series between ’70-79. This team is still regarded as one of the best ever. After a successful 1990 campaign, the Reds entered the World Series as a big underdog to the powerful Athletics, who had demolished the Giants in the ’89 Fall Classic. Though the underdog role was unfamiliar to the Big Red Machine of the ’70s, the 1990 Reds seemed to thrive on it and used great pitching and scrappy play to sweep the A’s in 4 games.

CHICAGO CUBS (1876-)
World Championships (since 1903): 1907, 08
National League Championships: 1876, 80, 81, 82, 85, 86, 1906, 07, 08, 10, 18, 29, 32, 35, 38, 45
National League Division Championships (since 1969): 1984, 89

Though the Cubs haven’t been to the World Series since 1945, there isn’t a team in the Major Leagues with fans as devoted as the ones who flock to Wrigley Field. Prior to the 1945 World Series, the Cubs appeared in a respectable 10 World Series, however they lost 8 consecutive Series after winning in 1907-08. For even the most loyal Cub fan, the 1969 season was a difficult one to endure. Throughout the first half of the 1969 season, the Cubs sat atop the Eastern Division and, by mid-August, their lead had grown to 8 ½ games. As the summer came to a close, the Cubs began to fight two foes: pressure inflicted on themselves and the Miracle Mets, a lowly expansion team that finished 9th or 10th in each of their previous 7 seasons. The Mets made an incredible charge overtaking the Cubs eventually winning the division by 8 games. The significance of this event is that the Cub fans stuck by their team following the flop. Today, 25 years later, fans in Chicago can buy “Forgiven But Not Forgotten” shirts referring to the summer of ’69.

COLORADO ROCKIES (1993-)
World Championships: None
National League Championships: None
National League Division Championships: None

The Rockies had what can be described as a very successful inaugural campaign in the National League. They won 3 more games than their expansion cousins, the Florida Marlins and set a Major League Baseball attendance record with over 4 million fans passing through the Mile High Stadium turnstiles. In 1995, the Rockies will begin play in a new park in Denver.
FLORIDA MARLINS (1993-)
World Championships: None
National League Championships: None
National League Division Championships: None

The expansion Marlins begin their second season in 1994. The Marlins early pursuit of top players through free agency and trades should please fans in South Florida, and with a roster comprised of experienced veterans and promising young players, the Marlins look to continue building toward success in the near future.

HOUSTONASTROS (Houston Colt 45s 1962-1965, Houston Astros 1966-)
World Championships: None
National League Championships: None
National League Division Championships (since 1969): 1980, 86

The Astros came into the National League at the same time as the Mets, and while they never were as bad as the worst Met teams, they never achieved the success of the great Met teams either. Historically, the Colts-Astros have had stronger pitching than hitting. This was true in 1962 and is still true today. When the Astros won their two division championships, they were led by the great pitching of J.R. Richard, Joe Niekro, Nolan Ryan, and Mike Scott. Today, the Astros are armed with one of the best starting rotations in the National League and look to former Phillie closer Mitch Williams to bolster the bullpen. On the offensive side of the plate, the Astros are looking for young stars like Jeff Bagwell, Craig Biggio, and Luis Gonzalez to return and lead the team to post-season play in the '90s.

LOS ANGELES DODGERS (Brooklyn Dodgers 1890-1957, Los Angeles Dodgers 1958-)
World Championships (since 1903): 1955, 59, 63, 65, 81, 88
National League Championships: 1890, 99, 1900, 16, 20, 41, 47, 49, 52, 53, 55, 56, 59, 63, 65, 66, 77, 78, 81, 88
National League Division Championships (since 1969): 1974, 77, 78, 81, 83, 85, 88

While the Giants/Dodgers rivalry has certainly been heated over the years, Dodger fans from Brooklyn to Los Angeles must shudder at the thought of playing the Yankees in the World Series. The Dodgers were arguably the best N.L. team during the '50s, appearing in the World Series 5 times during the decade and 10 times between 1947-66. However, the Dodgers only won 2 World Championships during the '50s and held a 1-6 record against the Yankees in 7 Bronx/Brooklyn “Subway Series” matchups. It looked like old times in 1977 and 1978 when the Bombers and the Los Angeles Dodgers clashed in consecutive years with both championships going to the Yanks. In 1981, the Dodgers won only their third Series against the Yankees in 11 tries. Ironically, the Yankees won more championships, but became the team that fans loved to hate while the Dodgers became one of the game’s most popular teams.

MONTREAL EXPOS (1969-)
World Championships: None
National League Championships: None
National League Division Championships: 1981

During most of the '70s, the Expos were known across Canada as the national team. In the United States, the Expos, who for many years wore hats that resembled multi-colored beanies, were more of a curiosity that seemed out of place in tradition-rich National League. Of course, traditional uniforms were becoming less common in the '70s as buttons and belts were replaced by pullovers and elastic waist bands. The Expo image improved as they began to shake the customary expansion era blues. In the late '70s the Expos compiled the best record in the National League between 1979-1982, including a divisional championship in 1981, and have enjoyed 12 winning seasons since 1979. Today, the Expos are building off 2 consecutive 2nd place finishes and setting their sights on higher goals.
NEW YORK METS (1962-)
World Championships: 1969, 86
National League Championships: 1969, 73, 86
National League Division Championships (since 1969):
1969, 73, 86, 88

The Mets’ story can be described simply as the best of times and the worst of times. Born through expansion in 1962, the Mets were awful during the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. From 1962-68, they finished 9th or 10th each season averaging a woeful 56 wins each season. The outlook became very rosy in 1969. Not only did the Mets finish over .500 that year, but they won 100 games and stormed past the Cubs to win the division championship by 8 games. The Miracle Mets’ incredible run continued in the ’69 Series as they topped the heavily favored Orioles in 5 games. Ironically, Davey Johnson, who made the final out in the ’69 Series for the Orioles, returned to manage the Mets in the ’80s as the team returned to the top of the National League after a decade of mediocrity. During Johnson’s tenure, the Mets won 2 division championships and 1 World Championship in 7 seasons and were favored nearly every year to play in the World Series; incredible pressure for any team, but even tougher in New York. In 1993, the Mets reclaimed their role as baseball’s worst team.

PHILADELPHIA PHILLIES (1883-)
World Championships (since 1903): 1980
National League Championships: 1915, 50, 80, 83, 93
National League Division Championships (since 1969):
1976, 77, 78, 80, 83, 93

Of the eight original National League teams, the Philadelphia Phillies have gloomiest history. Recent successes, including a World Championship in 1980 and three World Series appearances and six division championships since 1976, have blurred the perception of futility surrounding the Phillies. But, the Phillies endured a 29 second division (5th, 6th, 7th, or 8th place) finishes in a 30 year stretch and a 65 year period without a World Series win. From 1901-1960, the Phillies won 3893 games and dropped 5130 games with only 15 winning seasons, worst of the 8 National League teams in the pre-expansion era. Even when they were on top, the Phillies found a way to lose. For example, on September 21, 1964, the Phillies held a 6 1/2 game lead over the Cardinals. After losing 10 of their last 12 games, the Phillies found themselves in 2nd place on the last day of the season. The outlook was much brighter a decade later when led by Mike Schmidt, the Phillies of the late ’70s and early ’80s became one of the top teams in the National League.

PITTSBURGH PIRATES (1900-)
World Championships (since 1903): 1909, 25, 60, 71, 79
National League Championships: 1901, 02, 03, 09, 25, 27, 60, 71, 79
National League Division Championships (since 1969):
1970, 71, 72, 74, 75, 79, 90, 91, 92

Though they didn’t get the attention the Reds enjoyed in the ’70s, the Pirates of the Disco Decade were nearly as talented. During the ’70s, the Pirates, Dodgers, Phillies, and Reds won 18 of 20 division championships. Though the Pirates finished in 2nd place to the Phillies from 1976-78, the Bucs were the stronger team winning 6 division championships and 2 World Championships from 1971-79. Though the ’70s Pirates enjoyed success over a longer period of time, the 1960 Pirates had the most memorable finish to a season. After winning the 1960 N.L. pennant by 7 games, the Pirates were still expected to be steamrolled by the Yankees, who were appearing in their 26th Series since 1921. In Game 7, the Bucs trailed 7-4 in the 8th inning but scored 5 runs to take a 2-run lead. The Yanks followed with 2 runs to tie the score at 9. But, Bill Mazeroski, the Pirates 2nd baseman, led off the bottom of the 9th and slammed the 2nd pitch over the left field wall to break the tie and end one of the best World Series ever.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS (1900-)
World Championships (since 1903): 1926, 31, 34, 42, 44, 46, 64, 67, 82
National League Championships: 1926, 28, 30, 31, 34, 42, 43, 44, 46, 64, 67, 68, 82, 85, 87
National League Division Championships (since 1969):

If Reggie Jackson is Mr. October, then the St. Louis Cardinals are the National League’s Boys of October with 9 World Championships in 15 World Series appearances. This is particularly impressive since many of the Cardinal titles came during the Yankees’ incredible World Series dominance from 1927-62. Also, there are other N.L. teams with more league pennants, but the Redbirds have won more World Championships than any other National League team. Factoring the Cardinals’ three National League Championship Series triumphs in with their World Series victories increases the team’s postseason series win percentage to an impressive 67%. Over the years, the Cardinals have been led by many current and future Hall-of-Famers including Dizzy and Daffy Dean in the ’30s, Stan Musial in the ’40s and ’50s, Bob Gibson in the ’60s, Lou Brock in the ’70s, and Ozzie Smith in the ’80s.
SAN DIEGO PADRES (1969–)

World Championships: None
National League Championships: 1984
National League Division Championships: 1984

After joining the National League in 1969, the Padres experienced 10 seasons of mediocrity before making a move toward the top of the division with the help of several key player acquisitions. In 1984, the Padres won their only division championship with Dick Williams at the helm. The Padres plan was to sign players who had experienced winning with other clubs. Williams, a former Brooklyn Dodger, knew a lot about winning as well. In 1967, Williams won an A.L. pennant with the Red Sox. Williams also managed the A’s during their championship years in the early ’70s. The 1984 N.L. Championship Series may be one of the most interesting matchups in recent memory with the expansion Padres and Cubs, a team that hadn’t experienced postseason play in nearly 40 years. Led by NLCS MVP Steve Garvey, the Padres topped the Cubs in 5 games and prepared for the awesome Tigers, who won 104 games during the season. Although the Tigers easily handled the Padres in the World Series, the experience of playing in the fall classic gave the Padres the lasting respectability that surrounds a winning franchise.

World Championships (since 1903): 1905, 21, 22, 33, 54
National League Championships: 1888, 89, 1904, 05, 11, 12, 13, 17, 21, 22, 23, 24, 33, 36, 37, 51, 54, 62, 89
National League Division Championships (since 1969): 1971, 87, 89

The New York Giants were arguably the best team in the National League during the 30 years following the merger in 1903. In later years, fireside stories about the Giants often included their rivals from Brooklyn. One of the most famous Giants/Dodger confrontations occurred in 1951 when the Giants rallied from 13 games behind on August 11 to catch Brooklyn and force a playoff. In the deciding game of the three game playoff, Bobby Thomson came to the plate in the 9th with two men on base and the Giants trailing 4-2. Thomson’s heroic homer is still known as the “Shot Heard ’Round the World” thanks to the emotional radio call by Russ Hodges, the Giants announcer, who could only manage to repeat that famous phrase “THE GIANTS WIN THE PENNANT! THE GIANTS WIN THE PENNANT!” Since 1951, the Giants and Dodgers have clashed in several season ending confrontations including 1993 when the Dodgers beat the Giants on the season’s last day to keep the Giants out of a possible playoff against the Braves.

Baltimore Orioles

World Championships: 1966, 70, 83
American League Championships: 1944, 66, 69, 70, 71, 79, 83
American League Division Championships (since 1969): 1969, 70, 71, 73, 74, 79, 83

It’s a little known fact that the Baltimore Orioles were once the Milwaukee Brewers—the original Brewers, that is. A charter member of the American League in 1901, the team moved from Milwaukee to St. Louis and changed its name to the Browns prior to the 1902 season. The purpose of the move was to give the new American League a team in St. Louis, the fourth-largest city in the nation at that time. The Browns never enjoyed the popularity of their cross-town rivals, the Cardinals. Of course, bad play didn’t help. From 1901-1953, the Browns winning percentage was anemic .433 with only one World Series appearance, which the Browns lost to the Cardinals. As bad as the Browns were, the Orioles of Baltimore have been absolutely stellar by comparison. Since 1969, the Orioles have the best winning percentage in baseball including the incredible 1969-71 O’s that averaged 106 wins per season during that 3-year span.

BOSTON RED SOX (1901–)

World Championships: 1903, 12, 15, 16, 18
American League Championships: 1903, 04, 12, 15, 16, 18, 46, 67, 75, 86,
American League Division Championships (since 1969): 1975, 86, 88, 90

Known as one of the best sports towns in the country, Boston and its people have enjoyed a very special love affair with their Red Sox. Fans from Beantown have also endured a great deal of frustration from a team that since 1918 has often challenged and occasionally won the American League pennant without bringing home a World Championship. Cynical followers have blamed the “Curse of the Bambino” for the drought. The curse refers to the fateful December day in 1919 when the Red Sox sold Babe Ruth to their arch-rivals, the Yankees. Prior to the sale, the Red Sox were arguably the best team in baseball with 5 World Series championships between 1903-18. Conversely, the sale of the greatest player of all time helped transform the Yankees, a mediocre team without a World Series appearance, into the most dominant team in professional sports.
CALIFORNIA ANGELS (Los Angeles Angels 1961-1965, California Angels 1966-)
World Championships: None
American League Championships: None
American League Division Championships (since 1969):
1979, 82, 86

Responding to the Dodgers' immediate fan appeal in Los Angeles, the American League expanded in 1961, adding their own team in L.A. Walter O'Malley, the Dodgers' owner, wasn't pleased about the prospect of another team moving into his recently chartered territory and would only agree to deal if the Angels leased the use of Dodger Stadium for four seasons. Though the team played well for an expansion team during those early years, the Angels were never able to overshadow the mystique of the Dodgers in the Los Angeles area. In 1966, the Angels moved into Anaheim Stadium following the expiration of the Dodger Stadium lease and changed their name. Today, the Angels are using a new philosophy toward winning emphasizing youth rather than the use of older players. Traditionally, the Angels have ignored their farm system and tried to win using veterans who paid their dues with other clubs. While this strategy landed the Angels in post-season three times, it didn't help them win any American League or World Championships.

CHICAGO WHITE SOX (1900-)
World Championships: 1906, 17
American League Championships: 1900, 01, 06, 17, 19, 59
American League Division Championships (since 1969):
1983, 93

For nearly 100 years, the White Sox have been Chicago's southside team. Sharing the Windy City's fan base with the Cubs, who play on the North side of town. During this time, the White Sox have fielded some great teams including the Shoeless Joe Jackson led teams of the 1910s and the Go-Go Sox of the 1950s, which was one of only two American League teams other than the Yankees to appear in the World Series from 1949-60. Led by one of the best young pitching staffs in baseball, the White Sox won a division championship, in 1993, and experienced post season play for only the 2nd time since 1959.

CLEVELAND INDIANS (1901-)
World Championships: 1920, 48
American League Championships: 1920, 48, 54
American League Division Championships (since 1969):
None

Though the Indians have become the butt of many jokes due to their lack of postseason play in the last four decades, the Tribe of the late '40s and early '50s ranks among the best in American League history. The Indian teams of the post-World War II era averaged 94 wins each season between 1948 and 1956, and although they won a World Championship in 1948, the Indian team that lost the 1954 World Series was actually better, winning an amazing 111 games, which was 8 more wins than the 2nd place Yankees. In fact, the 103 wins by the Yankees in 1954 marked the highest total amassed by any of Casey Stengel's dominant Yankee teams of the 50s. Today, there is a new feeling of enthusiasm in Cleveland. With the opening of a new stadium in 1994 and several young All-Stars on their roster, the Indians are counting on re-kinding the glory of their past.

DETROIT TIGERS (1901)
World Championships: 1935, 45, 68, 84
American League Championships: 1907, 08, 09, 34, 35, 40, 45, 68, 84
American League Division Championships (since 1969):
1972, 84, 87

The most prominent Tiger teams from a historical perspective come from 4 different eras. The first of the great Motorown teams were led by Ty Cobb, one of the most competitive and talented players of all time. The teams of the 1930s featured the powerful Hank Greenberg, who clouted 58 home runs in 1938, still #3 on the all time list. The 1968 World Series featured a pair of pitchers (Detroit’s Denny McLain 31-6, 1.96 ERA and St. Louis’ Bob Gibson 22-9, 1.12 ERA) who posted seasons that are still regarded as among the most dominating of all time. Led by Jack Morris, Kirk Gibson, and Lance Parrish, the 1984 Motor City Kitties jumped out to a 35-5 record to start the season and never looked back as they overpowered opponents and finished with a 104-58 record and a World Series victory over the Padres.
KANSAS CITY ROYALS (1969-)
World Championships: 1985
American League Championships: 1980, 85
American League Division Championships: 1976, 77, 78, 80, 84, 85

The Royals are an example of the perfect expansion team. The team has never finished in last place and won their first division championship in their 7th season. By building a strong minor league system, the Royals were able to call up extremely talented young players like George Brett, Frank White, and Hal McRae and let the players mature together on the field. This set up a reload, not rebuild formula for success in Kansas City. In fact, if it weren’t for the Oakland A’s of the early ’70s and the New York Yankees of the late ’70s, the Royals may have received more recognition as one of the best teams of the decade. The Royals, however, did get to World Series twice in the ’80s, winning the Big Show in 1985 over the Cardinals in a dramatic 1-70 series. That season reaffirmed the Royal tradition when 21-year old Bret Saberhagen won 20 games, the Cy Young award, and World Series MVP award. Recently, the Royals haven’t won as many games, but the wheels haven’t completely fallen off either as the young Royals of the ’90s are poised to make another run to the top.

MILWAUKEE BREWERS (1969-)
World Championships: None
American League Championships: 1982
American League Division Championships: 1982

After joining the American League in 1969 as the Seattle Pilots, the team changed its name and moved to the midwest in 1970. The Brewers, who celebrate their 25th season in Milwaukee in 1994, have had several fine teams and many outstanding players throughout the last quarter century. Led by managers George Bamberger and Harvey Kuenn, the power-hitting Brewers of the late ’70s and early ’80s became affectionately known as “Bambi’s Bombers” and “Harvey’s Wall Bangers”. To date, the 1982 season is remembered as the Brewers shining moment. Future Hall of Famers Robin Yount and Paul Molitor led the charge as the Brew Crew topped the Orioles on the last day of the season to capture their first divisional championship. In the American League Championship Series, the Brewers overcame a 0-2 deficit to top the California Angels and win a trip to the World Series against the St. Louis Cardinals.

MINNESOTA TWINS (Washington Senators 1901-1960, Minnesota Twins 1961-)
World Championships: 1924, 87, 91
American League Championships: 1924, 25, 33, 65, 87, 91
American League Division Championships (since 1969): 1969, 70, 87, 91

Of the 8 American League teams that started play in 1901, the Senators/Twins have the fewest World Series appearances. In fact, for years a popular phrase in Washington was “first in war, first in peace, last in the American League”. The Senators didn’t always have the best teams, but they did have the game’s best and most popular pitcher in Walter Johnson. The “Big Train” was the game’s first power pitcher, compiling 3508 strikeouts in an era lacking in the free swingers that many pitchers feast on today. Following 60 seasons of mediocre baseball in Washington, the Senators moved to Minnesota and became the Twins. Though the Twins won a pennant in 1965 and division championships in 1969 and 1970, they usually fielded teams that were competitive, but unable to challenge for the pennant. This was demonstrated by 9 consecutive 3rd or 4th place finishes between 1972-80. Recently, the Twins have enjoyed the most success in franchise history winning two World Championships since 1987.

NEW YORK YANKEES (1903)
World Championships: 1923, 27, 28, 32, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 43, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 56, 58, 61, 62, 77, 78
American League Championships: 1921, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 32, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 76, 77, 78, 81
American League Division Championships (since 1969): 1976, 77, 78, 80, 81

If the number of championships is your yardstick for success, then the Yankees are the most dominant Major League Baseball team of all time. In addition to collecting 33 World Series Championships, Yankee rosters have featured Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, and Mickey Mantle, four unique players who transcended baseball stardom to become icons of 20th Century American culture. In fact, Yankee lore reads like a Who’s Who of Baseball with 28 former pin-stripers already elected to the baseball hall of fame. Though the 1927 Yankees, led by Ruth and Gehrig, are often regarded as the best team of all time, the Bronx Bombers of the 1950s, led by the legendary Casey Stengel, were more dominant, winning 5 consecutive World Championships from 1949-1953 and appearing in 10 World Series between 1949-60.
World Championships: 1910, 11, 13, 29, 30, 72, 73, 74, 89
American League Championships: 1902, 05, 10, 11, 13, 14, 29, 30, 31, 72, 73, 74, 88, 89, 90
American League Division Championships (since 1969):
1971, 72, 73, 74, 75, 81, 88, 89, 90, 92

After passing through Kansas City on their way from Philadelphia, the Athletics settled in Oakland and established a personality and style of play that has made them one of the most successful franchises in the last 25 years. But, winning hasn’t always been associated with the A’s. While they won 5 championships during Connie Mack’s 50 year tenure as manager, his teams finished 7th or 8th place in the eight team American League 20 times. After moving to Kansas City in 1955, the Athletics’ struggles continued to the point where the team moved to Oakland in 1968, after 13 consecutive 2nd division seasons in K.C. After the move, the A’s quickly picked up a winning tradition. Led by a cast of characters that included Reggie Jackson, Catfish Hunter, and Rollie Fingers, the A’s won five consecutive division titles from 1971-75 and three consecutive World Championships from 1972-74. After rebuilding the team, the A’s returned to form in the late ’80s and appeared in three straight World Series from 1988-1990.

SEATTLE MARINERS (1977)
World Championships: None
American League Championships: None
American League Division Championships: None

Since entering the league in 1977, the history of the Seattle Mariners has consisted of more downs than ups. In fact, early Mariner highlights often centered around strange give-aways like “Funny Nose Glasses Night” more than great play on the field. But, in recent years, the attitude in Seattle has changed with a greater emphasis on winning. This has been demonstrated by the hiring of a proven manager (Lou Piniella) who is still in the prime of his managing career and the active pursuit of top players through trades and free agency. After 14 seasons of sub-.500% baseball, the Mariners finished over .500 in 1991 and again in 1993 and now strike fear in opponents with Randy Johnson’s power pitching, Jay Buhner’s cannon arm, and Ken Griffey Jr.‘s exciting all-around play.

TEXAS RANGERS (Washington Senators 1961-1971, Texas Rangers 1972-)
World Championships: None
American League Championships: None
American League Division Championships (since 1969): None

Born through expansion to pacify Washington citizens following the original Senators’ move to the Twin Cities, the new Senators never took flight enduring 10 losing seasons before moving to Arlington, Texas in 1972. Like the Seattle Mariners in the 1980s, the Rangers struggled to shake their expansion image in the 1970s. Throughout the ’70s, the Rangers made a habit of acquiring veterans who were past their prime. Many of these transactions backfired leaving the Rangers with a depleted farm system and a high payroll. Although the Rangers haven’t won a division championship since moving to Texas, many experts consider the Rangers to be the team of the ’90s with players like 24-year old Juan Gonzalez, who has already won 2 home run titles and Will Clark, a perennial all-star during his 8 seasons with the Giants.

TORONTO BLUE JAYS (1977)
World Championships: 1992, 93
American League Championships: 1992, 93
American League Division Championships (since 1969):
1985, 89, 91, 92, 93

Joining the Seattle Mariners as an expansion team in 1977, the Toronto Blue Jays didn’t exactly set the league on fire during the team’s first few years. In fact, it took the Blue Jays six seasons to finish higher than last place in their division. However, behind a philosophy centered around nurturing bright, young talent that would grow within the organization, the Blue Jays quickly became a powerful force in the American League in the mid-1980s and have not finished lower than 3rd place since 1987. Most recently, the Blue Jays became the first team to win back-to-back World Series titles since the 1977-78 Yankees.
As a kid, Ken Griffey Jr., the son of a Major Leaguer, was fortunate to have the opportunity to shag fly balls and take batting practice with the game's best players. This experience paved the way for a smooth and early beginning of his own big league career. In 1989, at age 19, Junior's lively bat and dazzling defense helped him make the Mariner opening day lineup. In his Major League debut, he showed the poise of a veteran doubling off Oakland ace Dave Stewart in his first at bat. Throughout his first season, Ken's stellar defensive achievements drew immediate comparisons to the original Kid, Willie Mays.

In 1990, Junior and his father, Ken Sr., made Major League history as the first father and son to play together on the same team. Later that season, the Griffey duo smashed back-to-back home runs in the first inning of a game against the California Angels. Following the 1990 season, Junior won his first Gold Glove to become the youngest American League player to receive that honor.

He also drove in 203 runs during that two season stretch and was named the MVP of the 1992 All-Star Game in San Diego.

The 1993 season was the year that transformed Griffey Jr. from a star on the horizon to a legitimate League MVP candidate. En route to clouting a career high 45 home runs (tied highest in Major League Baseball), Junior tied a MLB record by hitting at least one home run in eight consecutive games. Now five years into an already brilliant career, many baseball experts consider Ken Griffey Jr. to be the most dynamic and talented player in the game.
